programs.

The industry-centered curricula of the programs prepare students for leadership roles in this challenging, multifaceted, competitive field. Our faculty of experts in the construction management profession bring invaluable real-world experience to the classroom, teaching technical skills, decision-making techniques and the principles of environmental sustainability.

The successful candidate will be expected to teach a variety of construction management courses at the undergraduate and graduate levels; contribute to the program through curricular/course development, course coordination, assessment for ABET accreditation, student advising, and student recruitment; conduct original research and engage in scholarly activities; and perform service at the Program, College, and University levels.

Qualifications:

Candidates must hold the terminal qualification in their discipline (e.g., PhD or foreign equivalent in Construction Management, Civil Engineering, or a closely related field). An exception may be made for candidates with extensive industry experience in construction management (10 plus years) who do not hold the PhD. In this case, candidates must possess professional licensure and one of the following categories of acceptable academic credentials: 1) a combination of a professional Bachelor's and Master's degree; or 2) a terminal professional Master's degree. The disciplines for the degrees may be in construction management, architecture or a closely related discipline. Foreign equivalents to U.S. degrees are acceptable. Candidates who fulfill these criteria will be hired on a non-tenure track. Candidates with 3 years of experience in college-level teaching in the field and 3 years of industry experience in construction management with a strong record of research/scholarship and/or professional practice are preferred. The candidate must have organizational and sound communication skills and must be a team player and relationship builder. An aptitude for professional and pedagogical engagement in a collaborative, interdisciplinary environment is required. Candidates with a knowledge of ABET accreditation; assessment practices; and online teaching will be preferred. Desired qualifications include professional credentials such as LEED AP.
