The Department of Mechanical Engineering offers a range of undergraduate and graduate-level courses and has an opening for a non-tenure track Lecturer. This lecturer position requires teaching undergraduate courses in Mechanical Engineering in English in-person for at least three to four months per year at the University of Houston-Dalian Maritime University Institute (in Dalian, China). In addition, this position may involve teaching undergraduate and possibly graduate courses on the University of Houston's main campus in-person or online from the United States. Additional information about the Institute, which delivers University of Houston undergraduate degrees in Civil Engineering, Mechanical Engineering, and Electrical and Computer Engineering, can be found at <https://dmu.egr.uh.edu/>.

The University of Houston, with one of the most diverse student bodies in the U.S., seeks to recruit and retain a diverse community of scholars. Interested and qualified candidates who are willing to teach in Houston and in Dalian are invited to apply. Applications should include a cover letter, complete contact information for three professional references and a curriculum vitae.

Qualifications: Ph.D. or equivalent doctoral degree and ability to teach mechanical engineering courses in English in-person from China and in-person or online from the United States.

How to Apply Applications should include a cover letter, complete contact information for three professional references and a curriculum vitae. The application and associated documentation should be submitted to the following site for consideration:
