The Nanyang Assistant Professorship scheme provides the opportunity for outstanding early career researchers and exceptional scholars from Singapore and around the world, who aspire to a research leadership role at NTU. Successful NAP awardees will be given a tenure-track Assistant Professor appointment and granted a substantial start-up grant (SUG) to lay the foundation for their research ventures within the university.

NTU invites outstanding early-career researchers (postdoctoral fellow or equivalent) to apply for an appointment as a Nanyang Assistant Professor.

Eligibility criteria

- Applicants must be early career researchers, holding a PhD or MD or equivalent degree, obtained within the last 10 years.
- A strong track record of early achievements and the potential to lead an independent research group are required.
- Selected candidates must be committed to taking up an independent research appointment at NTU.
- Clinician scientists engaged in translational and/or clinical science, encompassing areas such as bench-to-bedside research, clinical trials, epidemiology, digital health, health services research, and interventional studies in any medical discipline, are also encouraged to apply.

Benefits

NAP Awardees will enjoy a comprehensive set of benefits designed to support and enhance their academic and research at NTU:

- An attractive remuneration package.
- A tenure-track appointment and opportunities in leading roles in the University's new wave of multi-disciplinary and integrative research projects.
- Access to excellent R&D infrastructure, featuring state-of-the-art laboratories provided by the University, as well as opportunities for research funding.
- Each NAP Awardee will receive a start-up research grant (SUG), which will be determined based on the awardee's research track, as outlined below:

STEM: Up to SGD 1.5 million startup research grant and scholarships for hiring up to 5 PhD students

SHAPE: Up to SGD 1 million startup research grant and scholarships for hiring up to 2 PhD students
