As the largest department on campus with 1,300 students, the Aerospace Department at Middle Tennessee State University (MTSU) is rapidly growing and innovating as leadership continues to invest in faculty for the aviation program, one of the largest in the nation. Thanks to a substantial investment of $62 million from the state and university, flight and maintenance programs are set to move to a state-of-the-art training facility at Shelbyville Municipal Airport by fall of 2026, a move which falls in line with the Department's commitment to excellence in providing an exceptional student experience. MTSU's rich history of teaching students to fly dates back to World War II when flight training took place right on campus. The Aerospace Department boasts over 80 years of flight training experience and with robust institutional support, the Department is exploring additional programs in engineering and design, all aimed at advancing aerospace research and scholarship.

This position reports to the Chair of the Department and is a tenure-track faculty position at the rank of Assistant/Associate Professor.

Established in 1942, the Aerospace Department is now a signature department at MTSU and has grown into one of the most respected aerospace programs in the nation. It is among the largest of the nation's collegiate aviation programs with twenty full-time faculty members, 100+ flight instructors, and over 1,300 students. MTSU Aerospace Department offers six undergraduate concentrations (Aviation Management, Aerospace Technology, Flight Dispatch, Maintenance Management, Professional Pilot, Unmanned Aircraft Systems Operations) and a master's degree program in Aeronautical Science with three concentrations (Aviation Education, Aviation Management and Aviation Safety and Security Management). Students from 32 states and 16 foreign countries have been drawn to study here. Aerospace graduates hold responsible positions with companies throughout the United States and internationally.

Living in the Area

Murfreesboro, situated in Rutherford County, is a city in central Tennessee about 35 miles southeast of Nashville. With a population of 153,000, Murfreesboro is one of the largest cities in the state. The city is known for its American Civil War history. To learn about the city's past, one can explore the Stones River National Battlefield, the restored Oaklands Mansion, a former plantation house with an arboretum and gardens. Cannonsburgh Village, which showcases regional history from the 1830s to the 1930s, with buildings including a schoolhouse and general store, is a popular place to visit. The region is surrounded by natural beauty, with parks, rivers, and outdoor recreational areas nearby including Barfield Crescent Park, the Greenway System and Old Fort Park. In addition, the city hosts various cultural events, festivals, and community gatherings throughout the year.

Murfreesboro is consistently ranked as one of the best places to live in TN. The city has experienced population growth in recent years, largely due to its proximity to Nashville, its reputation as a family-friendly community, affordability and a strong job market. Job growth in Murfreesboro is 54.14%, greater than the US Future Job Growth of 30.54%.
